Identifying challenges in traditional processing, and consensus building

SENCAB supports community towards improved processing methods

In line with its programme component of interfacing traditional enterprise with modern industrial practices, SENCAB aims at supporting the retention of useful traditional, and ecologically friendly methods, and supporting the practice of contemporary industrial practices. The aim of the consensus building sessions is to map out existing challenges in traditional practices as well as draw up possible strategies to address them. This includes roping in community stakeholders in drawing up concrete sustainable strategies. It is expected that the onset of this process will assist in further developing sustainable partnerships towards supporting indigenous economic activity through skills training and technical support.
